30) The field of operations management is shaped by advances in which of the following fields?
(A) chemistry and physics (B) industrial engineering and management science (C) biology and anatomy (D) information technology (E) all of the above
Answer: E
Discussion: Operations management is a discipline that has emerged from the intersection of several fields. It is a multidisciplinary field that draws on knowledge from various areas to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of operations. The fields mentioned in the options are all relevant to operations management. Chemistry and physics provide the foundation for understanding the physical processes involved in manufacturing and production. Industrial engineering and management science focus on the design and optimization of production systems. Biology and anatomy are relevant to the study of human factors and ergonomics in the workplace. Information technology is crucial for the automation and control of operations. Therefore, all of the above fields contribute to the development and practice of operations management.
