Some people think that value investing is you chase companies which have a lot of cash and they're in a lousy business or something. But I don't define that as value investing. I think all good investing is value investing. It's just that some people look for values in strong companies and some look for values in weak companies.

In January of last year, I wrote that climate risk is investment risk. I said then that as markets started to price climate risk into the value of securities, it would spark a fundamental reallocation of capital. Then the pandemic took hold - and in March, the conventional wisdom was the crisis would divert attention from climate.
