Two things will stop a Roosa Master. The first is a lack of fuel. This is the side that everyone looks at. Make sure there is fuel through the filters and available to the pump. Pretty basic. The second is the killer that catches a few. The Roosa Master "MUST" get rid of the return fuel or it will not run.

I've taken apart a junk Roosa Master pump. From what I saw, I really don't think this is something that should be done in the home shop. What's wrong with the pump? leaking into the crankcase or not pumping fuel. If it's leaking into the crankcase, you can replace the shaft seals without taking the pump apart.
